

Canyon 'Rush Hour' Is Less Than Grand

U.S. Park Officials Plan to Curtail Noisy Copters, Planes Overhead

GRAND CANYON, Arizona — Down, down, deep into the craggy narrow of the magnificent chasm went the hiker, working his way with infinite care along a serpentine path carved into the sheer vermilion wall of rock that drops more than a mile from rim to river. The sun was setting by the time he reached the canyon floor, where he set up camp and sat down to soak up the splendid scenery and the profound, engulfing silence of the Grand Canyon.

But at sunrise the next morning, the canyon's ancient stillness was shattered. All day long the tall cliffs echoed with the high-pitched whine of small planes, the roaring throb of turboprops, the "WHUP-WHUP-WHUP" of an acrobatic fleet of helicopters.

"You spend two or three days getting to a remote campsite and you might as well be on the main runway at O'Hare" airport in Chicago, said the hiker, Bruce E. Babbitt, a Grand Canyon authority who is also governor of Arizona. "The planes can be as loud in the heart of Grand Canyon as the downtown rush hour in Phoenix."

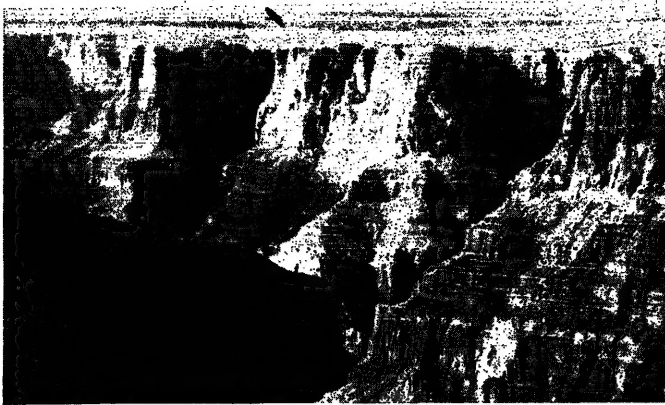

After complaining for years about noise from the air tour companies that operate about 50,000 sightseeing flights through Grand Canyon National Park each year, Mr. Babbitt and other environmentalists have started a campaign to ban or limit the aerial traffic. Air tour companies are fighting back vigorously, pointing out that their $40-million-per-year industry provides a key source of income for local communities and lets hundreds of thousands of people, including the handicapped and aged, see this awesome patch each year.

Smack in the middle is the National Park Service. "The whole controversy is another example of the age-old conflict between natural preservation and human enjoyment of the resource," says Richard Marks, the park superintendent.

Park planners say they will not permit the current situation, which involves more than 20 flights per hour over the South Rim some summer days, to continue. Nor will they ban all air tours. Between those extremes, the park could propose limits on the time and number of flights on flight routes and minimum altitude, or on types of aircraft.

"It is not certain, though, that the park rules will be effective. 'I keep asking, how am I going to enforce this?' Mr. Marks says. 'I don't have an air force.'"

All tour operators and environmentalists are at odds over restoring the sound of silence in the Grand Canyon.

About three million people come each year to the Grand Canyon, which Theodore Roosevelt called "the one great sight which every American should see." The big tourist comes by bus or car to overlook sites along the rim. A small percentage cruises through by boat along the Colorado River. Another small group hikes down into the interior.

The air tour industry carries about 400,000 people per year over and into the chasm, according to the Grand Canyon Flight Operators Association. Ronald Warren, president of the association, says planes and helicopters are the "cleanest" way to see the canyon.

"The buses pump out their exhaust over the rim and the back-along the Colorado River. Another small group hikes down into the interior. Environmental groups respond that the air traffic could cause damage to geological formations or archaeological remains; the Park Service says it has no evidence of this. Environmentalists say the flight noise endangers dwindling species like the peregrine falcon and big horn sheep; the service is studying this question."

Rob Smith of the Sierra Club, a leader in the battle for silence, said environmentalists "have pretty much lost our argument" that the Grand Canyon should be free of motors. "But we still like to establish that silence is a resource, that 'seeing' Grand Canyon includes hearing the silence," he said.

The British author J.B. Priestley heard the utter silence of the majestic depths when he hiked the canyon in 1937. "There was in this immensity," Priestley wrote later, "a silence so profound that soon all noises from the life about us on the rim were lost in it — as if our ears had been captured forever, drowned in these depths of quiet."

WORLD BRIEFS

Perez May Seek UN's Waldheim File

NEW YORK (NYT) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel has said he does not understand why the United Nations is holding secret documents on the World War II activities of its former secretary-general, Kurt Waldheim. He said that Israel might ask the UN to release the file. "I don't see any reason why an organization like the United Nations should keep anything secret," Mr. Peres said Wednesday at a meeting with young Jewish leaders in New York. Asked if Israel might request the Waldheim papers, Mr. Peres answered, "If there will be a need, yes."

The papers are among 40,000 sealed files put together by the UN War Crimes Commission from 1945 to 1948. Mr. Waldheim is running for president of Austria in an election May 4. He has rejected allegations that he participated in war crimes.

5 Arrested in Italian Wine Scandal

TARANTO, Italy (Reuters) — A southern Italian wine producer and four other men were arrested Thursday by police investigating the deaths of 15 persons who drank adulterated wine. The arrests brought to seven the number of people held in connection with deaths caused by wine strengthened with methyl alcohol. An eighth suspect is being sought, the police said. Antonio Fusco, 54, who owns two wine companies in the town of Manduria, near Taranto, was held Thursday on charges of selling wine containing illegally high amounts of the chemical, the police said.

They said two men arrested near the northern cities of Mantua and Bologna were charged with large-scale doctoring of wine and had set up a chemicals company as a front for the operation. Two others were accused of distributing the wine to retailers.

Malaysia Sets State Vote After Unrest

KUALA LUMPUR (UPI) — Authorities said Thursday that elections will be held in the east Malaysian state of Sabah on May 5 and 6, adding to speculation that Prime Minister Mahatir bin Muhammad would call general elections at the same time. The Sabah state government was suspended in 1984 after the state assembly voted to support a proposal to secede from Malaysia. Five persons were killed and many were injured in violence last month. The five-year term of Mr. Mahatir's National Front coalition expires in April 1987. Analysts said that if he waited much longer to call a general election, mounting economic and political problems would likely erode the government's overwhelming majority.

Egypt to Prosecute 1,200 in Police Riot

CAIRO (Reuters) — Egypt will try 1,236 people on charges, including murder and sedition, for their part in riots by police in February, the public prosecutor said Thursday. Many of the suspects would face the death penalty, the prosecutor said. The election commission had deferred announcing election dates for the 1986 parliamentary elections because of the riots.

NASA to Replace Shuttle Project Chief

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief of the space shuttle project office at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Alabama, has been replaced by a new chief. The new chief is Dr. Robert F. Overmyer, who has been with NASA since 1968. He will be replaced April 14, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced.

NASA said Wednesday that Stanley R. Reinartz, a rocket engineer, was being reassigned to his former position as manager of the agency's special projects office. Appearing before the commission investigating the explosion Jan. 28 of the shuttle Challenger, Mr. Reinartz defended his decision not to order top management to make the shuttle be grounded for good. 91 Held in Raid on California Campus

BERKELEY, California (AP) — The police raided a shantytown Thursday that had been set up on the University of California campus in an anti-apartheid protest. They arrested 91 people, and at least 29 persons were injured in an ensuing clash, officials said. Two men were arrested for possessing fire bombs, the police said.

Fighting broke out between officers, who used clubs, and demonstrators, who threw bottles and stones. The demonstrators tried to block police buses by throwing trash cans, constructing barricades or sitting in roadways. A university spokesman said 11 protesters and 18 policemen were injured.

The protesters want the university to withdraw about $2.4 billion it has invested in companies doing business in South Africa. It was the second series of arrests in anti-apartheid demonstrations this week at the campus.

Gorbachev Offers Grim View of Relations With U.S.

By Gary Lee

Washington Post Service

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev says in an interview with an Algerian magazine that his proposed visit to Washington "remains in the field of vision," but he gave no otherwise gloomy assessment of U.S.-Soviet relations.

Describing the state of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union as "uncertain," Mr. Gorbachev said: "We have discovered that as soon as we make a step forward to meet the U.S. position, the U.S. takes a step back from it."

He referred to the U.S. confrontation last week with Libya in the Gulf of Sidra as "gambol diplomacy," and said: "Evidently, former lessons have been wasted on Washington, which more than once has had to pay for its military ventures."

"It was not for American interference in the affairs of other states," he added, "regional conflicts would be on the wane and be solved in far simpler and more just ways."

The interview appeared Thursday in the magazine Revue Africaine and was released by the Soviet press agency Tass.

Mr. Gorbachev said that his summit meeting with President Ronald Reagan in Geneva in November, "half opened the door to hope."

"But how this ray of light frightened people associated with the U.S. military-industrial complex," he continued. "How hotly they pressed against the door to slam it shut."

The Soviet leader decried the lack of progress at the U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations in Geneva and called on Washington to reconsider his proposal for a meeting in Europe to discuss a bilateral ban on nuclear testing.

The United States has rejected the proposed meeting, saying it still intends to conduct nuclear tests but favors an eventual ban on testing if nuclear arsenals on both sides can be decreased.

Mr. Gorbachev said that his offer for a meeting with Mr. Reagan in Europe was "not instead of our meeting in the United States of America, on which we agreed in Geneva and which I didn't even mention this time."

"As for my visit to the United States, this remains in the field of vision of both the Soviet and the American sides," he said.

Moscow has not so far responded to the formal invitation Washington sent to Mr. Gorbachev last December for a meeting in late June. The White House has said that, after July, Mr. Reagan's commitments would preclude a meeting before the end of the year.

Mr. Gorbachev said the interview, which followed a visit to Moscow by President Chadi Bendjedid of Algeria, to express Soviet support for liberation movements and to attack Reagan administration initiatives in trouble spots in the Third World.

Mr. Gorbachev said, "What a multitude of fantastic stories American politicians have spawned about the U.S.S.R. and Cuba to justify the escalation of the military ventures against Nicaragua."

The Reagan administration "has offered its embrace," he said, to opponents of the government in Afghanistan, "bandits from UN-ITA in Angola and South African racism."

Mr. Gorbachev referred to an "anti-Soviet syndrome" in Washington but said, "I would not emphasize on the fact that a dialogue between the leadership of the Soviet Union and the U.S. administration is necessary."

Wallace Ending Career Spanning Segregation to Biracial Politics

By William E. Schmidt
New York Times Staff Writer
MONTGOMERY, Alabama — The leadership of Governor George Wallace, who announced his retirement from public life, bridged three turbulent decades of Southern history, from the years of segregation to the new era of biracial politics.

In an emotional farewell Wednesday before hundreds of supporters and state employees in the Alabama Capitol, Governor Wallace, who had served as governor from 1963 to 1967, 1971 to 1979, and 1983 to 1985, declared:

"After much prayerful consideration, I feel that I must say I have climbed my last political mountain."

Mr. Wallace's decision, brought down the curtain on a remarkable political career that, in the end, carried him well beyond the South.

It began, at his first inauguration in 1963, with a defiant "Segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever." These words, that same year, his defiant stand in the schoolhouse door to block the admission of two blacks to the University of Alabama.

His career reached its zenith, a decade later, in 1972, in a popular election. Then, for the first time, he realized its full potential, and he was cut short by a bullet that left Mr. Wallace permanently paralyzed below the waist.

Mr. Wallace conducted four underdog campaigns for the presidency between 1964 and 1976. His economic political agenda reflected his own ability to articulate the hopes and frustrations of two days before the filing deadline for candidates running for state-wide office. His current term expires in January.

By forgoing his opportunity for a last hurrah, Mr. Wallace brings to an end an era in Southern politics. Among his colleagues in the region, many of them younger, reform-minded governors wanted on the post-segregation era, he has been described as a kind of political lion.

"Those five bullet wounds me a thorn in the flesh as they did to the South," said Mr. Wallace. "And I pray that it should be removed, but it would not."

"As I grow older," he went on, "the effects of my trauma may become more noticeable, and I may not be able to give you the fullest measure that you deserve from a governor throughout another term."

His announcement came just hours as, at last, outlived George Wallace.

His decision to withdraw leaves a general consensus among the Democratic nomination. They include Lieutenant Governor Bill Battle, who is now the front-runner, Attorney General Charles Graddick, former Lieutenant Governor George McMillan, former Governor John James and Billy Joe Camp, Mr. Wallace's former press secretary.

The winner of the June 3 primary is almost certain to be the next governor, since Alabama's politics are concentrating most of their resources on the re-election of Senator Jeremiah Denton.

Mr. Wallace first ran for governor in 1958, when he was defeated by John Patterson, who made race the key campaign issue. A moderate in that contest, Mr. Wallace vowed he would never be a "nigger baiter" again.

He was elected governor four times in 1962, 1970, 1974 and 1982. He sought the presidency as a Democrat in 1964, 1972 and 1976 and as a third-party candidate, representing the American Independent Party, in 1980.

Angola, Assailing U.S., Asks UN to Take Over Negotiations for Region

By David B. Ottaway
Washington Post Staff Writer
WASHINGTON — The Angolan government has asked the United Nations to take over the negotiations for the region, assailing the United States for its role in the conflict.

In 1972, 21 years after his inaugural battle cry of "segregation forever," it was black voters who helped elect Mr. Wallace, a former country and Western singer, in 1963.

Over the last three decades, both Mr. Wallace and Alabama have changed enormously after his inaugural battle cry of "segregation forever," it was black voters who helped elect Mr. Wallace, a former country and Western singer, in 1963.

He has done a lot of populist things, like building junior colleges and expanding the highway network. But he has also been a director of the state Democratic Party. "He has been a friend of blacks," he said, "in recent years, so ally of blacks."

"But at the same time," Mr. LePrie said, "I don't think history will ever forget that he was the man who stood in the schoolhouse door."

In a way, Mr. Wallace's ability to change with the times was the hallmark of his political resilience. "Some people see George Wallace as changing over the years," said Frank Sanders, a Democrat and state senator who has frequently advocated white separatism.

"But what I see," Mr. Sanders said, "is a man who just had a keen sense of what was going on in the world. He was a man who was a keen sense of what was going on in the world. He was a man who was a keen sense of what was going on in the world."

The Angolan ambassador to the United Nations, Paulo Figueiredo, confirmed that Angola was asking the UN to take over "the entire process" of negotiations over Namibia. He also dismissed the importance of the criticism against the clergy and of the faithful of the archdiocese.

Archbishop Lignone declined an interview Wednesday to discuss the nature of his conversations at the Vatican. He also dismissed the importance of the criticism against the clergy and of the faithful of the archdiocese.

Ex-Reagan Aide's Work For Canada Investigated

By Bernard Weinraub
New York Times Staff Writer
SANTA BARBARA, California — The General Accounting Office is investigating Michael K. Deaver's work as a consultant for the Canadian government, according to officials at the agency and at the White House.

Mr. Deaver, who resigned last year as White House deputy chief of staff, was retained to help Canada deal with the Reagan administration's policy on acid rain and other issues.

The GAO, which is the investigative arm of Congress, said Wednesday that its inquiry was focusing on whether there was any connection between Mr. Deaver's work on acid rain in the White House, his consulting job with the Canadian government, and his role in influencing the administration's policy on acid rain.

The federal ethics law is aimed at restricting the activities of officials of influence.

Mr. Deaver was closely involved in a meeting last year with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada, in which a commitment to study the problem of acid rain was made.

Less than two months later, Mr. Deaver left the government and joined the aerospace company as seeking to increase the air force's purchase of B-1B bombers, made by Rockwell.

Administration officials said the meeting took place in February. It was the first time Mr. Deaver had been seen since he left the White House job.

Clergymen Seek Archbishop's Ouster, Alleging Collaboration With Duvalier

By Marilee Simons
New York Times Staff Writer
PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — A group of Haitian priests and nuns are pressing for the resignation of the archbishop of Port-au-Prince, who they say has collaborated with the government of President Jean-Claude Duvalier.

They have also named four priests who they feel should be removed from their parishes.

Militant sectors of the Roman Catholic Church have played a key role in the removal of President Duvalier on Feb. 7 after he was behind the campaign against the archbishop, François-Léon Lignone.

The campaign represents the first public rift in a church that has been united during the months that priests inspired and guided Catholic youths and students in their protests and demonstrations and strikes against the 29-year Duvalier family rule.

It also coincides with nationwide demands that officials associated with the deposed regime be purged from Haiti's new interim government.

Church sources said the move against the archbishop was likely to bring a strong response from the Vatican, which has so far not criticized the openly political role of the Haitian bishops and clergy.

"You are an element of division," the letter said. "You have lost the confidence of a large portion of the clergy and of the faithful of the archdiocese."

The Bush Mission to Saudi Arabia: How Oil and American Politics Mix

By Robert D. Hershey Jr.
New York Times Staff Writer
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's apparent determination to seek oil price stability from Saudi Arabia has focused national attention on the pros and cons of oil and the political implications of the high political stakes involved.

While still proclaiming the virtues of free markets and free trade, the administration sent Vice President George Bush to Saudi Arabia on Thursday, apparently to persuade the dominant member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries that it should take action to stabilize or even increase the price of oil by cutting production.

"Now that prices have fallen to the $10-a-barrel range on spot markets, the administration has become worried about the economic damage that could result from domestic oil shortages, especially in Mr. Bush's home state of Texas and other oil-producing states."

The debate about economics and national security leads in turn to politics. Mr. Bush's bid for winning the presidency in 1988.

Saudi Arabia's decision last fall to flood an already weak oil market with a steady stream of oil, which was widely considered the main reason for the drop in prices, which this week fell below $10 a barrel in the futures market.

On Thursday, the vice president prodded the Saudis, warning about the danger of a "continued free fall" in oil prices.

There is no doubt that lower oil prices have been a boon to most economies, most regions of the United States, most industries and consumers.

Americans in Libya: Qadhafi's 'Friends'

By Edward Schumacher
New York Times Service

TRIPOLI, Libya — He is a Texan, a grizzled old worker, and President Ronald Reagan had ordered Americans to leave here by Feb. 1, he was in suburban Tripoli a few days ago cutting his hair.

Like most of the estimated 200 to 300 Americans still in Libya, he stayed on even though the fighting March 24 and 25 between the 6th Fleet and Libya forces in the Gulf of Sidra. He said he had left no money behind in Libya.

"We joined about this year, whatever it is," he said, describing his days at the office with Libya workers as a "rough bushy job."

Now, he said, referring to President Reagan and the Libyan leader, Colonel Muammar Qadhafi, "both bad boys have done their thing and this should be the end of it."

The Texan, who declined to give a name for fear of raising legal problems with the United States or political issues with Libya, seemed to be typical of many Americans here.

It is one of the anomalies of Libya under Colonel Qadhafi that even as he is calling for Americans in other Arab countries to be killed as spies, he is telling his own people that the Americans in Libya are friends.

Qadhafi, a member of the 6th Fleet, has been in Libya since 1969, and he is a close friend of the late President John F. Kennedy. He is a close friend of the late President John F. Kennedy. He is a close friend of the late President John F. Kennedy.

One readily apparent reason is that in this oil-producing country of only 15 million people, the economy is dependent on foreign workers. Among the several hundred thousand foreigners here, a reported 100,000 are Americans. The prime minister, a Canadian, a Philippine doctor, a Polish nurse, a Moroccan head waiter, a Korean construction worker and a Turkish mechanic, all on temporary contracts.

For the most part, the Americans here with vital oil industry skills are not in the oil industry. They are in the oil industry. They are in the oil industry.

U.S. Fleet in Mediterranean Disperses

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Navy fleet that attacked Libya across the Gulf of Sidra last week was dispersing Wednesday. The fleet, which included the USS Zumwalt (DDG-921) and the USS Johnston (DD-991), was seen heading south towards the Strait of Gibraltar.

consider such an action. But it is not now a case of war. Colonel Qadhafi also denied involvement in the bombing of the TWA airliner.

David Hoffman of The Washington Post reported from Santa Barbara that Qadhafi had denied involvement in the bombing of the TWA airliner.

He said they would lead to "unemployment and misery" for blacks and would cause violence. The Association of Chambers of Commerce said: "Businessmen find it hard to reconcile the call for economic sanctions with their daily experience of blacks seeking work at shops, offices and factories."

Black Tuesday said a recent survey published in a London newspaper, the Sunday Times, showing that more than 70 percent of blacks supported sanctions against South Africa.

Talks on Natal Legislature. Talks on a proposed international legislature for one of South Africa's four provinces opened Thursday, but major anti-apartheid groups refused to take part. The Associated Press reported from Johannesburg.

The talks, convened under heavy security in the port city of Durban, focused on the possible formation of a joint legislative body to govern Natal province and the black homeland of KwaZulu.

They heard gunfire and saw the police use tear gas in clashes with youths in the black township of Volokwazi.

senior U.S. diplomat told Honduran officials that the administration demanded a more public Honduran reaction to buttress its position with the Congress.

The U.S. diplomat told the Honduran government: "We want to help you, but you are leaving us exposed in Congress," the official said. He denied reports that the U.S. was planning to send troops off aid to Honduras, but said the administration's concern was made obvious.

The Honduran government agreed to protest the Sandinist raid privately in a message to the Nicaraguan government, the official said. The Honduran also asked for U.S. military aid after the U.S. Embassy here suggested such a request would be welcomed by the administration, he said.

The Honduran government wanted Nicaraguan troops to leave Honduran territory, the official said, but felt that they were already withdrawing. He said the Honduran did not expect the administration to make public either the Sandinist raid or the Honduran reaction.

He said he felt Honduras had fallen into a trap in which the administration used the Honduran incident to drum up support for the Sandinist Army and the presence of Soviet-bloc advisers in Nicaragua.

According to two Western diplomats here, the Hondurans asked for a long list of military supplies, including anti-aircraft missiles, and requested U.S. Army helicopters to carry a Honduran battalion to the border. The U.S. Embassy insisted that the request be in writing so that the administration could publish it, the diplomat said.

Honduras asked for the helicopters mainly to test the U.S. commitment to a new security arrangement under which the administration has agreed to aid Honduras if Nicaraguan troops cross the border, the Honduran official said.

The official, who spoke in the presence of two other Honduran officials, said Honduras was concerned by the military buildup and Marxist ideology of Nicaragua and therefore was willing to lose the guerrillas to continue operating.

But at the same time, the official said, Honduras was determined to stand up to war with Nicaragua. He suggested Honduras would be willing to negotiate a settlement in which the presence of the Nicaraguan rebels here might be traded for a major reduction in the size of the Sandinist Army and the presence of Soviet-bloc advisers in Nicaragua.

U.S. Hopes Libyan Military Will Seek Qadhafi's Removal

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration hopes its actions against Libya will ultimately prompt military officers and others in that country to remove Colonel Muammar Qadhafi as its leader, according to sources in Congress and in the executive branch.

The sources said Wednesday that the decision to send U.S. ships and planes into the Gulf of Sidra, which is claimed by Libya but is regarded as international waters by most countries, was part of the effort to force Qadhafi to leave.

If you think nothing's stirring on the London Hotel Scene, Look again. It's on the Boil

Trying to fathom the London hotel scene is a little like looking at a typical British steak-and-kidney pie, fresh out of the chef's oven. Judge it by its smooth crust and you think nothing's happening. Put a fork in, and you find it's bubbling with red-hot activity underneath.

So it is with London's hotel world. No construction cranes clutter the skyline heralding the peak of a frantic hotel building boom. Hotels aren't being bought and sold, willy-nilly, in a frantic realignment of the major international chains and the minor regional consortia.

But there's plenty going on.

Twenty-three years ago, the London Hilton was the city's newest hotel; a massive twenty-three storey high-rise which caused all sorts of public debate when it went up because tourists might be able to see the Royals at play in the gardens of Buckingham Palace.

But you'd be wrong if you think that not much has been done to the hotel since it opened. "In fact," insists GM Rupert Huber, "we like to say we're London's newest hotel right now, because we've done such a massive job of refurbishing and remodeling." More than $12 million has been invested, to date, and by April 1 (no fooling) every guest room had been completely upgraded.

Upgrading the health of its frequent traveler guests is also high on Hilton's agenda. Mr. Huber is supervising the creation of a new health center on the premises, where bodies can be treated in the solarium, baked in a sauna pummeled by a masseur and set a-tingle in massage showers. "The pressures of business travel being what they are," Mr. Huber explains, "we cannot overlook the guests' wellbeing while looking after their comfort."

Hilton is also showing a heightened concern for the needs of its business traveler guests. The four top storeys have been re-styled as Executive Floors. There's a lounge up there where the managers can meet, have a continental breakfast together, sample free canapés during the cocktail hour, and read a library of international newspapers and magazines. Also on the floor is a mini-meeting room where deals can be discussed across a boardroom table. And a small office where free-lance secretarial help can be put to work completing the documentation.

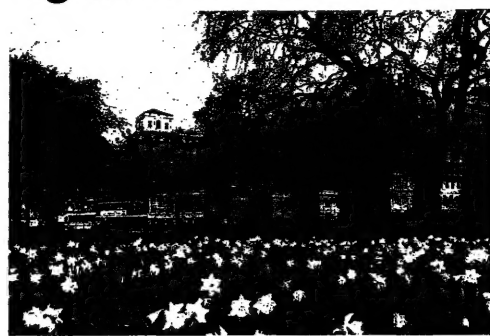

Elsewhere in the sky scraper, they've set up a Business Office open to all 3,000 of the guests who sleep there when the Hilton is full up. In addition to the usual telex service, there's a global fax system, permitting the guest to transmit documents which might be too confidential to send by wire. And the guest can personally supervise this finding; no need to hand over sensitive documents to a third person to transmit.

Possibly the newest hotel in London today is the Dorset Square, open for just a few weeks and already attracting a lot of attention from discriminating travelers.

"What we are," says General Manager Martin Ball, "is a country house hotel in the middle of London. We're small - just 30 rooms. We're swash in fresh cut flowers, china curatins and coverings. Also, we don't have any four poster beds, yet, but we do have the closest thing: what they used to call a 'half tester' in the old days. Very comfortable and very elegant."

Near Regent's Park, the Dorset Square is two Georgian buildings on a Georgian square. "Our guests have access to the private gardens nearby," Mr. Ball reveals. Despite the heavy English influence, it's an American, Mrs. Kit Kemp, who designed the interiors. She and her husband Tim own the hotel. And they've made sure that along with the ye olde English atmosphere there's plenty of American comfort and convenience, like jet nozzles on the showers and remote control color TV in all the rooms.

Few of London's hotels have had quite as much spent on them in recent years as the London Marriott. Since purchasing what was then the Europa just off Grosvenor Square, the Washington-headquartered Marriott chain has poured some £14 million into bringing the hotel to true five-star brilliance.

"What we've created here," says Henry Davies, the hotel's urbane general manager, "is a luxury hotel which possesses an air of gentility, something like you'd find in a British country mansion, yet we've created this same ambience right here in the very center of London."

The needs of the harried business traveler, and the up-market holidaymaker, have been uppermost in the minds of the hotel's refurbishing team. Beds in most of the 18 suites and more than 200 guest rooms are king size; telephones are direct dial; TV sets are remote-controlled and also carry in-house feature films.

The executive-on-the-go need not worry about getting his work done; there's a fully-equipped business center down below where he can hire secretarial help, get out a telex, photo-copy documents and even have translations done. Winding up, of course in the hotel's Diplomat Bar for a self-congratulatory toast or two to a job well and truly done.

"There are two very important things to remember about the Park Lane Hotel," insists Ann Tabor, from her office in the hotel overlooking Hyde Park. "First, we're an English hotel, and I emphasize the word English. We're not an international room factory. We don't pretend to be Continental. What you get with us is English décor, English staff, the English way of doing things."

They've been busily refurbishing the hotel's 324 rooms for two years now, and the effort is at last coming to an end. Fifteen of the 54 posh suites have been fitted out with jacuzzis.

The London craze for brasseries has made its impact on the Park Lane which recently opened its own Brasserie on the Park.

If you were asked, offhand, to describe a hotel in London owned by Tokyo's Nikko Hotel chain which is linked to Japan Air Lines, you could be forgiven if you conjured up a Japanese-style glass and chrome palace, staffed by an army of tiny Asian servants. Nikko's Montalim Hotel couldn't be less like that. It's a small, 116-room hotel, located off Great Cumberland Place just two minutes walk from Oxford Street, yet as if it were on a country village green.

"We operate almost as if we were a private club," explains General Manager Jonathan Orr-Ewing. "In the US we were voted by readers of a publication 'the best-kept secret in London' and we revel in the title. We're just that."

The building will never change because it's Listed - the British way of maintaining its finest architecture. The hotel is actually adjacent Georgian buildings linked together which have hardly been altered since Beau Brummell used to parade nearby.

Of course, the interior is both tasteful and efficient. Veteran travelers particularly recommend the suites which are duplex - sitting room below, bedroom above and a charming spiral staircase linking the two.

"The Thistle group is the second biggest quality hotel organization in London," insists John de Trafford who heads up Thistle's marketing. "Only TEF is larger. Thistle has some 2,200 top quality rooms for visitors. And I think the most important thing we offer is choice."

"Choice of location, for instance. Our hotels are strategically scattered across the map of London, from the Tower Hotel on the Thames and right next to the City, to the Kensington Palace in west London close to some of the key shopping streets."

"Choice in price. We don't cost our rooms at the astronomical Inter-Continental - Inn on the Park levels. You can pay as little as £60 a night for a Thistle room and our very top prices are up around £135."

"We offer a wide choice of décor as well. If you like high rise modernity, then you'll enjoy our Tower Hotel with its conference facilities and its glass wall views of the Bloody Tower and Tower Bridge. Or you can revert to the oldest of British traditions and stay at the Royal Horseguards right in the middle of Whitehall. "I don't think any hotel organization has spent as much as we have on improving our properties. We've invested some £15 million over the past three years on our London properties. You can see the fruit of this, for instance, in the 300 Executive Club rooms we've created for the Tower."

"There's a computer check-out terminal on these Executive Club floors so business travelers can be sped on their way."

While many hotels claim to have Michelin three-star level talent on their premises, London's Grosvenor House does more than just boast. It has retained the French culinary genius, Louis Othier, as its consul de cuisine. Othier runs the Oasis in La Napoule in the south of France which has attracted top honors from Michelin and the other top guide books.

"Monsieur Othier comes up to London at least four times a year to work with us for a week or more," explains Vaughan Archer who presides over the Grosvenor House. (Continued in column 1, facing page)

Golf Comes Back in High Style to Post-Mao China

by John F. Burns

THE urge to play golf in China had been with me since a balmy spring day in London in 1971. Over lunch at the Royal Aero Club, a friend of my father's regaled me with tales of his days in China in the 1930s, when he had been an aviation pioneer. When he wasn't doing stunts in early monoplanes over the Great Wall, he told me, he was playing golf at a splendid course outside Beijing. If the caddy master was still there, would I pass on his regards?

From what I had read about Mao Zedong's Cultural Revolution, then in full swing, it seemed doubtful that the caddy master would still be in the trade. With the Red Guards' hostility toward all things foreign — still more for a pastime that placed Chinese in servitude to the intruding business — he seemed more likely to be musing the day he learned to distinguish between a driver and a wedge. Golf in China, I recalled, was about as passé as Ching Khat-shah.

I learned that the course my host had extolled had been played over for one of Mao's communes and the only golf I found for the next five years was 1,500 miles away at the Royal Hong Kong Golf Club. There, the white-jacketed waiters serving fine food and lemons at thatched rest stops around the course were a blessed antidote to the mayhem of life under Mao.

Chasing northward across the mountains to China, only a dreamer could have imagined that something similar would be created inside the People's Republic before Mao was 10 years dead.

But this was a dream that came true. At Zhongshan Hot Springs, just across the Pearl River estuary from Hong Kong, golf has returned to China in a guise as alluring as anything that existed before Communism turned fairways into rice paddies.

A course financed by the Hong Kong property tycoon Henry Fok and designed by Arnold Palmer was the venue in early February of the first professional tournament ever staged in China, generating great enthusiasm among the players on the Asian circuit who played in it. At least one Fanning member, Alex Wai, born down the road in Zhongshan County, prefers the course to the Royal Hong Kong.

The 18-hole links nestled against the lower slopes of the Lochnan Hills, where an arched drive can play down beside a water buffalo pulling a wooden plow and the greens are tended by peasant women in conical straw hats, is the first of at least 10 courses under development across China. Since it opened in August 1984, two other courses have been inaugurated in the region, one a few miles away in the Zhuhai special economic zone across the border from the Portuguese enclave of Macao, and another, the closest of all to Hong Kong, in the Shenzhen special economic zone across the frontier from the British colony.

Shanghai, which boasted five courses before the Japanese occupation in 1937, is building a 36-hole course, one being built in the southeastern coastal city of Xiamen, and three are in hand in Beijing. Of these, the most promising is in the Valley of the Ming Tomb, 25 miles north of the city, where a Japanese company that built the Zhuhai course is preparing for a July opening of one of the most spectacularly situated courses anywhere.

HARD UP against the mountains that carry the Great Wall on its passage inland from the sea, the Beijing Golf Club will traverse ground considered sacred for centuries.

The Zhongshan course, too, sits in a locality rich in history. It was a few miles from the course, in a town of the same name, that the man regarded as the founder of modern China, Sun Yat-sen, was born in 1866.

For those passing through Hong Kong, a day trip here could be a more pleasant way to get a taste of the mainland than competing arrangements that whisk tourists around the language and landmarks of Canton.

As our car wound up the driveway to the clubhouse, situated atop a hill overlooking the course, we were struck by the orderliness of everything down the steep grassy verges, the neat clusters of mimosa and poinsettia, and the granite road markers in English and Chinese.

The impression was enhanced by the cheerful greeting extended to us in the clubhouse foyer by an energetic young man in a green blazer and tie. This was George Chow, one of a group of Hong Kong people employed by Fok, the course owner, to supervise operations.

After offering us the visitors' book to sign, Chow told us that the course was opened in 1984 at a cost of about $3.2 million. He hardly needed to say that no expense had been spared. From the high-valued foyer in a cool gray stone dug from local quarries, he led us down carpeted stairs to immaculate changing rooms with Jacuzzi-like baths fed from the region's mineral hot springs.

Upstairs, we found a bar, with English-language television from Hong Kong, and a roomy lounge offering meals, from hamburgers to full-course meals, Western and Chinese.

The course is also impressive. The fairways are laid out with Bermuda grass, intensely watered and watered by underground irrigation systems to produce a textured surface that makes for splendid play.

Even in winter, when the lush green of the rice paddies no longer carpets the valley, the view from almost any vantage point on the course is spectacular.

After renting a set of new Japanese clubs in the ample stocked pro shop, I was introduced to Cheng Weiling, one of 18 teenagers selected from local schools to work on the course half-days and spend the rest of their time learning to play under the course professional, Peter Tang. Tang was previously an assistant at the Royal Hong Kong and represented the colony for years in the World Cup, so it was no surprise to find that in the eight months he had been coaching the youngsters — none of whom had so much as seen a golf ball before — their best scores had tumbled into the high 70s, against a record 74 for women and 87 for men on the par-71 course.

With Cheng as caddy, I set out for the first hole, which sets the tone for a layout that yields no easy pars. About 150 yards downhill from the tee the fairway passes through a narrow creek between two water hazards. While I contemplated a lay-up, Cheng handed me a driver.

drive on the fourth hole introduced a natural hazard near me: a three-foot-long water snake that positioned itself in a pond to watch my chip to the fairway.

Back in the clubhouse by lunchtime, I ordered a steak and a glass of wine on the veranda. Chow had told me that the course was usually quiet on a weekday. Indeed, apart from myself and the trainers, the only player on the course was Wai, the member from Hong Kong.

When I wondered if Fok, the owner, could possibly be making money with so few players, Wai chuckled and replied: "Don't worry about Henry. He earns more interest in an hour than it costs him to run this place for a year!"

There are plans to attract the group golf tours that are popular among Japanese, and the visitors' book showed that groups from the United States had already been through. One was the women's golf team from the University of California, Los Angeles, which played at Zhongshan last year and established, in the person of Marianne Hsing, the women's course record.

For those looking for more than a day play, the Zhongshan course offers comfortable rooms in the resort that Fok began developing downhill from the course in 1980. An extensive complex that is popular with weekenders from Hong Kong, the resort includes a health club, tennis courts and a shooting range as well as horseback riding and archery.

There is a swimming pool, a discotheque and a department store stocked with the best things China has to sell, from antiques to the biggest frankfurters we had ever seen. Elegant villas set amid stands of banyan trees at the rear of the complex provide quiet rooms for an entire family.

For my own part, I can hardly wait to get back to Zhongshan. Although my father's bliss is no longer around, I like to think he was smiling down on me in his crested blue blazer as I prepared the course with my woods and irons.

THE 1986 Herald Tribune READER SURVEY

The International Herald Tribune currently sells more than 168,000 copies each day in 164 countries around the world. To serve this diverse international audience effectively, we need to know about its interests and characteristics. This information is important for our editors and our advertisers alike.

This is the week when, by means of this questionnaire, we take an annual snapshot of all our readers—including the full spectrum from new, even first-time readers, to regular established subscribers.

We need to know about you. And this questionnaire is the best way we have to find out. Accordingly, we would be most grateful if you would take a few minutes to complete this questionnaire, fold it using the instructions on the reverse side, and mail it back to the independent organization which conducts this survey, Research Services Ltd. in London. Your replies will be treated in complete confidence; we do not even ask for your name or address.

As a gesture of our appreciation we will make a charitable donation to the charity of your choice for each returned questionnaire.

This reader survey is extremely important to us. The results of the survey and the total contributed to each charity will be published here in June.

With our warmest thanks,

Lee W. Kuehner

FOR FUN AND PROFIT

Tracking the Traveler
On Airborne Telephones

by Roger Colf

IT'S 9:30 P.M., two hours out of New York on route for London. You have a good view of the ocean and are about to see your executive assistant in a cabin attendant's uniform at your elbow. Taping Mr. Zich. Yes? There's a call for you, sir. You take the handset with a pained smile. It's that tricky customer in Tokyo. Twenty minutes later you have to make an urgent management decision—whether to watch the movie or chat with the mainframe computer in Boston. Springs through your banana-lap-size PC. Hell, there's no letting up these days.

This is only a slightly futuristic scenario. British Airways last month announced that by the end of 1987 it plans to start an experimental air-to-ground phone service on its trans-Atlantic routes. Unusually, passengers will be able to receive as well as make calls in the air. Unlike present air phone systems, which work by radio, the new system will use a satellite in orbit.

On the ground, cellular radio, well-established in the United States, is fast developing across Europe and the Far East. "I'm sorry I'm on the road," may soon no longer be a valid excuse for remaining incommunicado. The mobile phone is catching up with the traveler, whether installed in cars or trains, or simply carried in the pocket or briefcase, it is becoming too ubiquitous to ignore.

Airfone, a joint venture of Golem Communications Inc. and Western Union, started its in-flight phone service in the United States last in 1983 after protracted wrangling with the Federal Communications Commission, which was skeptical about using scarce broadcasting frequencies for such a purpose. The FCC granted Airfone a temporary permit which was extended last year. It is now a permanent one.

chance who may remain being turned into telephone operators and those who don't want to be disturbed. Maybe we shall see telephone and mobile phone sections of the plane. "Smoking with telephone, please."

According to Bill Grice, chief development engineer, avionics, at British Airways, a system to receive calls in flight is more a marketing than a technical problem. "We are working on some sort of paging device, but we haven't got very far. Somebody has to find a passenger on a jumbo."

Another marketing problem may be the cost of a call using the satellite system, which could run to $20 for three minutes. The BA experiment is a joint venture with British Telecom.

New technology puts air phones
within easy reach

Telecom and Aircel-Decca Advanced Development, a British company, is using capacity on Inmarsat, one of two satellites used for maritime communications. According to David Stone, a spokesman for British Telecom International, it will cover a large part of the world, including most of the Americas, the Middle East, Africa and the Middle East, representing about 50 percent of air movements, and may make air-to-ground radio systems like Airfone redundant.

The only practical way of getting a satellite, he says. He hopes that other airlines will join in customer demand is proven. But according to Grice, there is competition in view. Aeronautical Radio Inc. in the United States is talking about putting satellites into space for a similar system, although I think we have about a year's lead on them.

The reason why an Airfone type system is not available in Europe is that the 500 miles per second that it uses is already allocated to cellular radio on the ground and there is a problem of finding and agreeing on an alternative among the FTTs of the countries involved.

Cellular radio technology has revolutionized mobile phones on the ground. (Airfone) use it to move they move so fast that they scramble the frequencies of the closely packed cells a few miles apart. It works through a grid of low-powered transmitters.

These are linked by computer, so that if you're on the move, in a car or a train, you are switched from one cell to another. The advantages are extremely clear: reception and the capacity for thousands of people to make calls at the same time. British Telecom says that by the end of 1986, cellular radio will cover 65 percent of Britain and have around 70,000 subscribers. British Rail has plans to install cellular phones on its InterCity trains and France's SNCF on its TGVs.

Avia and Telecom are offering cellular phones on their top-range U.S. rental cars and in several European countries. There is not yet a standard from country to country for such equipment, but there is a possibility that European FTTs will succeed in harmonizing both frequencies and technology for a common standard.

Of more interest to the traveler is British Telecom's "roaming" phone. This program allows a series of numbers associated with a person's name. All you need is a "roaming" phone number. This number is used to dial that number for you. Who could wish for better company on the road?

Regional Flair in an Alsatian Family Inn

MARLENHEIM, France—Weeks later, you can probably still hear the cheering in this Alsatian village, the home of the folkloric local restaurant and hotel, Hostellerie du Cerf. In one week Robert Huser turned 50, learned that the restaurant he di-rected with his son Michel had gained its second Michelin star, and Michel's wife gave birth to their second child, a girl.

The Hostellerie du Cerf, a 15-minute drive from the center of

PATRICIA WELLS

Straubourg, is one of those rare, satisfying family places, where everyone seems to be looking after your interests and where the food has an authentic regional flavor. It's not the kind of place where the grandmothers, terrace tables and umbrellas to embellish the stone courtyard of this old, half-timbered farmhouse. So, Robert's garden will be sprouting with fresh green herbs, tender vegetables and even walnuts to adorn their menus, and soon, the region's famed asparagus (from the village of Hoenrich, just north of Straubourg) will find its way to the tables of the Hostellerie du Cerf.

It's hard to know who is more fortunate, father Robert or son Michel. Robert has the time to putter around in his garden, casually greet guests, take care of the hotel and restaurant operation, while Michel, who is the kitchen staff, has Michel's

Michel is proud of many details to be on the go and create to his heart's content. It's a very happy relationship, and it's the

NYSE Prices Decline Sharply

NEW YORK — Prices were sharply lower at the close of the scheduled April 13 meeting of the Dow Jones industrial average, which rose 5.15 points to 1,755.36 Wednesday, was down 2.70 to 1,752.66 shortly before the NYSE closed.

Although most U.S. stock market tables in this edition are from the 4 P.M. close in New York, for time reasons, this article is based on the market at 3 P.M.

Declines led advances by more than a 2-1 ratio among the 2,058 issues traded by 4 P.M. Volume was 145.7 million, up from 143.3 million Wednesday.

Analysts said investors have become wary in the wake of the scheduled April 13 meeting of Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries ministers and after conflicting signals from the Reagan administration on what the U.S. stance is on falling oil prices.

"Trading is reflecting investors' uncertainty with regard to oil prices," said Monte Gordon, research director at Dreyfus Corp.

Mr. Gordon said investors' perceptions of where interest rates are headed depends largely on the trend for oil prices. Lower oil prices relieve inflationary pressures.

Edward Nicolski of Minneapolis-based Piper Jaffray & Hoopes said a stronger technology sector was encouraging.

Mr. Nicolski said gains in the high-tech issues, which have lately been depressed, could point to a subtle shift in market leadership from such blue chips as Merck and Philip Morris, which have already made strong advances.

"There are bound to be some unpleasant first-quarter earnings surprises," Mr. Nicolski said. "But most of the technology companies with problems have already announced them. Computers may be overvalued while other market sectors are overbought," Mr. Nicolski said.

Spery was near the top of the active list and gaining.

Among actively-traded telecommunication and utility issues, AT&T, BellSouth, Illinois Power and Detroit Edison were higher.

Genstar was up a bit. Genstar may be able to avoid a proposed takeover by Inasco under a complex agreement that would allow the latter to acquire Genstar's major holding, a mortgage trust business, the companies said Thursday.

In the high-technology sector, IBM, Digital Equipment and Cray Research were up modestly.

Oil issues were mixed. Exxon and Occidental Petroleum were up while Atlantic Richfield and Texaco were lower.

In the auto sector, General Motors and Ford were lower. Chrysler was up.

R.J. Reynolds and Philip Morris were lower. The tobacco stocks weakened after a U.S. District Court judge in Boston set May 5 as the trial date for a smoker's case against Liggett Group, a division of Grinnell that makes tobacco products.

K mart was ahead after securities analysts at Dean Witter Reynolds and C.J. Lawrence spoke favorably of it.

Among actively-traded telecommunication and utility issues, AT&T, BellSouth, Illinois Power and Detroit Edison were higher.

Genstar was up a bit. Genstar may be able to avoid a proposed takeover by Inasco under a complex agreement that would allow the latter to acquire Genstar's major holding, a mortgage trust business, the companies said Thursday.

In the high-technology sector, IBM, Digital Equipment and Cray Research were up modestly.

Oil issues were mixed. Exxon and Occidental Petroleum were up while Atlantic Richfield and Texaco were lower.

In the auto sector, General Motors and Ford were lower. Chrysler was up.

R.J. Reynolds and Philip Morris were lower. The tobacco stocks weakened after a U.S. District Court judge in Boston set May 5 as the trial date for a smoker's case against Liggett Group, a division of Grinnell that makes tobacco products.

K mart was ahead after securities analysts at Dean Witter Reynolds and C.J. Lawrence spoke favorably of it.

NYSE Prices Decline Sharply

NEW YORK — Prices were sharply lower at the close of the scheduled April 13 meeting of the Dow Jones industrial average, which rose 5.15 points to 1,755.36 Wednesday, was down 2.70 to 1,752.66 shortly before the NYSE closed.

Although most U.S. stock market tables in this edition are from the 4 P.M. close in New York, for time reasons, this article is based on the market at 3 P.M.

Declines led advances by more than a 2-1 ratio among the 2,058 issues traded by 4 P.M. Volume was 145.7 million, up from 143.3 million Wednesday.

Analysts said investors have become wary in the wake of the scheduled April 13 meeting of Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries ministers and after conflicting signals from the Reagan administration on what the U.S. stance is on falling oil prices.

"Trading is reflecting investors' uncertainty with regard to oil prices," said Monte Gordon, research director at Dreyfus Corp.

Mr. Gordon said investors' perceptions of where interest rates are headed depends largely on the trend for oil prices. Lower oil prices relieve inflationary pressures.

Edward Nicolski of Minneapolis-based Piper Jaffray & Hoopes said a stronger technology sector was encouraging.

Mr. Nicolski said gains in the high-tech issues, which have lately been depressed, could point to a subtle shift in market leadership from such blue chips as Merck and Philip Morris, which have already made strong advances.

"There are bound to be some unpleasant first-quarter earnings surprises," Mr. Nicolski said. "But most of the technology companies with problems have already announced them. Computers may be overvalued while other market sectors are overbought," Mr. Nicolski said.

Spery was near the top of the active list and gaining.

Among actively-traded telecommunication and utility issues, AT&T, BellSouth, Illinois Power and Detroit Edison were higher.

Genstar was up a bit. Genstar may be able to avoid a proposed takeover by Inasco under a complex agreement that would allow the latter to acquire Genstar's major holding, a mortgage trust business, the companies said Thursday.

To Our Readers

Because of the seven-hour time difference between New York and Paris until April 27, some items in the market summary above are from 3 P.M. New York time instead of the usual 4 P.M. Also because of the time difference, some smaller items elsewhere in the Business Section are from the previous day's trading. We regret the inconvenience, which is necessary to meet distribution requirements.

TOKYO—The Transport Ministry is urging adjustments in air fares between Japan and Europe to remove differentials caused by the yen's recent appreciation against European currencies, a ministry official said Thursday.

Yen fares from Tokyo to European cities are much higher than comparable fares in Europe, an incentive for flights from those cities to Japan, the official said. The ministry is making a request from the International Air Transport Association for an 8-percent fare increase on flights from England to Japan and a 3-percent increase on flights from other European points to Japan.

The official said that the ministry also was urging Japan Air Lines Co. to introduce a 12-percent discount on round-trip fares between Japan and Europe and a discount of about 4 percent on tickets bought one month in advance.

Another trader said that many operators are still eager to buy dollars on technical grounds. He said a full correction to the dollar's prolonged fall would take the currency to around 2.50 DM to 2.60 DM, leaving plenty of room to move up.

In London, the pound was well bid at times, but failed to make much headway and eased to $1.4580 at the close from $1.4710 on Wednesday. High British interest rates continue to attract demand to sterling despite worries about oil prices, traders said.

A cartoon illustration by E. H. Rieu. It depicts a man with a large, dark mustache and a nightgown sleeping peacefully in a bed. The bed has a high headboard and a footboard. To the right of the bed is a nightstand with a lamp and a bottle. A small figure is peeking through the window. On the floor, there is a key and a coin. The cartoon is signed 'E. H. Rieu' in the bottom right corner.

It was almost evening. The sky was ablaze with the last fiery hues of the setting sun that had done its best, all through the day, to scorch the many isles in which we had anchored. To round off the last enchanted moments of such a memorable day, I had promptly mixed one of those cocktails for which I had become famous throughout the Caribbean, namely the COINTREAU BLUE TONIC: 3/10 of COINTREAU, 7/10 of Indian Tonic, a drop of Curacao, and plenty of ice. The night promised a wealth of sensations.

JUSTICE DOWNWIND: The Story of America's Atomic Testing Program at the Nevada Test Site

Reviewed by Carl J. Johnson

THE U.S. atomic-testing program began with a 16-kiloton nuclear explosion, "Fat Man," on Aug. 9, 1945. The explosion released 100 million kilowatt-hours of energy, enough to power 10 million homes for a year.

Sharp internal disagreement resulted from conflict between the overriding urgency of Atomic Energy Commission officials to complete tests on schedule and the concern of those aware of repeated injuries to thousands of rural Mormon families receiving the brunt of the cancer incidence in which all Mormon families in a fallout area are identified and followed forward in time and their cancer experience compared with that of all Mormon families in Utah. That study, published in 1984, found a 61-percent excess of cancer and leukemia in the fallout area.

The Associated Press
NEW YORK — Genstar Corp. said Thurs-

Although its headquarters is in San Francisco, Genstar is a Canadian company with interests in building materials and land development in addition to financial services.

Montreal-based Imasco owns Imperial Tobacco Ltd., Canada's largest cigarette producer, and U.S. holdings include Hardee's, a chain of fast-food restaurants, and Peoples Drug Stores.

The companies agreed that they would try to arrange for Imasco to buy Canada Trustco and certain other assets, which were not immediately identified, from Genstar.

In that case each of Genstar's common shares would be exchanged for 54 Canadian dollars (about $39) cash and a Genstar security valued at 4 dollars.

If the talks fail, however, Imasco would acquire all of Genstar's assets.

NCAA Adopts 3-Pointer

Instant Replays To Check Timing

The Associated Press
DALLAS — U.S. college basketball has adopted the three-point shot and the use of television instant replays to correct timing and scoring errors.

The men's rules committee of the National Collegiate Athletic Association announced Wednesday that the changes would take effect next season. Officials said the introduction of instant replays was partly due to a timing error in a Midwest Regional game, won by Kansas over Michigan State, during the last-completed NCAA tournament.

Under another rule change, coaches no longer will be charged with a technical foul if they leave the coaching box to protest errors involving timing, scoring or alternating possession.

Edward S. Steitz, secretary of the rules committee, said the three-point shot, which has become a popular feature in the National Basketball Association, was adopted by the 12-member committee after five years of experimentation among 20 conferences.

Three points will be credited for a shot made 19 feet 9 inches (6.03 meters) from the basket. The NBA distance is 23-9.

Steitz said it was hoped the three-point shot would "force teams to play more defense away from the basket. People will say, 'You are putting a little man back in the game, and that's good.'"

Steitz said instant replays would be used only to correct mistakes made by scorers and timers, and not for any officiating calls.

Mike Krzyzewski, coach of Duke, said the three-point shot "is a revolutionary change and this is a revolution in the game right now."

Edmonton's Coffey Breaks Orr's Mark

United Press International
EDMONTON, Alberta — Paul Coffey of the Edmonton Oilers has broken Bobby Orr's NHL record for most goals in a season by a defenseman. And he did it in fitting style — Orr's style.

Coffey scored his 47th goal 2 minutes, 44 seconds into the second period of an 8-4 triumph over Vancouver after an end-to-end rush — Orr's trademark in his prime.

The scoring dash gave Coffey his second goal of Wednesday's game, allowing him to eclipse the National Hockey League mark Orr set as a defenseman in 1974-75.

"I looked up at the scoreboard and said, 'I couldn't believe it,'" said Coffey, who won the Norris Trophy as the NHL's top defenseman last year in his fifth season.

Wayne Gretzky, who collected a goal and an assist, moved to within one point of his league record of 212, set in 1981-82.

With two assists in addition to the goals, Coffey raised his season points total to 137 — two short of another Orr record for a defenseman. Edmonton has two games left to play.

"With Coffey in the game, it is like they're going four forwards on the ice," said the Vancouver goalie, Willie Young.

"He is by far the best defenseman in the league," Gretzky said of his teammate. "He dominates play in his own end."

Orr set a telegram of congratulations from Palm Springs, California. He told Coffey, "I am pleased that a person of your caliber has succeeded me in the record books."

In spite of the loss, Vancouver clinched the final playoff position in the Smythe Division after Los Angeles managed only a tie, 4-4, against Winnipeg.

Coffey, a 26-year-old native of Brampton, Ontario, got his record-breaking goal on a short wrist shot that deflected off a Vancouver player and flew into the net over Young, who had fallen down.

Just 11 seconds before Coffey's first goal, his blue-line blast was tipped in by Jari Kurri, who changed the direction of the puck only marginally, leaving many thinking for a moment that Coffey had scored.

The goal was Kurri's 65th of the season for the Oilers, who fell behind 2-0 early before taking command of the game.

Glenn Sather, Edmonton's coach, said that during Coffey's run at Orr's record, "Paul handled the pressure very well. He was very relaxed and confident, and you could see that from the look in his eyes he was going to get it eventually."

The Oilers' record is 13-11-1, while the Canucks are 10-14-5.

Fires in U.S. Stables Take a Heavy Toll of Horses

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — An unusually rapid succession of barn fires has made the beginning of the 1986 season a time of little triumph in the equine world.

Flames that swept a stable at Festoon Farms near Camden, South Carolina, late last week killed 27 horses, most of them untrained 2-year-olds, and sought the year's toll in the United States to 129, including six in a fire at Thistle-down in Ohio two weeks before the one at Camden.

Two major blazes in January — at Belmont Park and at a training center in southern Indiana — killed 45 and 51, respectively.

Estimates are that in the last decade, large-scale fires — those in which more than 10 race horses perished — have claimed perhaps 450 in all.

The rash of recent blazes points to a question: What can be done to end the death of so many animals and the attendant loss of inestimable millions of dollars in livestock and property? The outlook isn't particularly bright. To begin with, the fires frequently occur not on tracks but on private farms, as at Camden and in Indiana.

The industry has joined with the National Fire Protection Association to form a committee that sets safety standards in stable areas, but once a fire breaks out, the old wooden barns that stand along the backstretch at most tracks remain relatively easy to burn.

Newer tracks have adopted concrete-block stables, but the cost of conversion at the older places is high.

Knee Injury Idles Lendl

The Associated Press
NEW YORK — Ivan Lendl, the top-ranked men's tennis player, was out of action for at least two to three weeks because of a knee injury, his agent said.

The agent, Jerry Solomon, said Wednesday that an orthopedic surgeon had examined Lendl and found that he might have a torn tendon. The player was undergoing heat and ice treatment, and taking drugs to reduce the inflammation in the quadriceps tendon.

Lendl aggravated the knee injury Sunday in Chicago in a loss to Boris Becker that broke a 25-match winning streak for the Czechoslovak.

Solomon said the injury was caused by wear and tear over time, and that Lendl could not bend the knee.

In Dallas, officials of the World Championship Tennis finals announced that Lendl had withdrawn from the $75,000 event to be played next week.

John McEnroe, the second-ranked player, and Jimmy Connors, fourth-ranked, will also miss the tournament.
